Waste Pods

Waste Pods are a unique way to store and remove rubbish. Perfect for slow moving sites that can only have a few exchanges per year or sites that are sensitive on space or image.

The Waste Pod is free of charge to install and there are no rental charges so you are in a win-win situation. You are only invoiced for what is removed by the cubic yard which means we only charge for what we remove. It is perfect for heavy items that may exceed your wheelie bin weight limits and save you from additional charges.

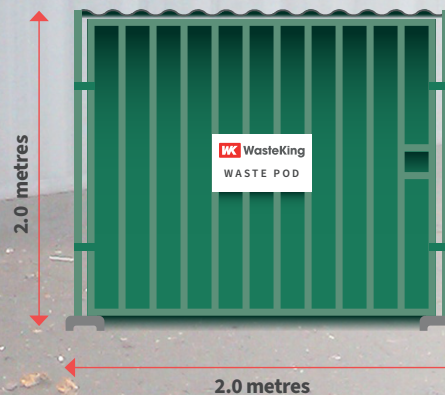

Also, the Waste Pod is only ever emptied at your request. All types of waste can be placed in the Waste Pod, including hazardous / paint/ bulbs / televisions / computers / fridges and even electrical waste that skips on occasions do not allow.

We currently have hundreds of Waste Pods and skips in local schools and care homes.

The Waste King Promise

Waste King aims to create a professional and environmentally responsible solution for both homes and businesses alike by creating the environmentally friendly solution to your waste removal and recycling.

In particular, Waste King's uniformed, Environment Agency-licensed staff take time to ensure that the maximum amount of waste can be recycled and that all the waste it collects is disposed of in an environmentally friendly way.

Established 15 years

Turning waste into treasure

For one business, responsibility is the top priority.
By Dan Matthews

"Be responsible" is rarely top of the list of goals set out by new companies, but when Waste King was founded in 2007, helping local people and improving the environment were front and centre on the business plan. Waste King clears homes and commercial properties – a service that could be seen as an innate brand of corporate social responsibility: unwanted waste such as old clothes, CDs and books is collected, processed and in most cases recycled. Business is good and turnover has increased from £26,000 in 2008 to £588,000 last year.

But the London-based company has only one eye on profits and has taken several extra steps to ensure it has a positive impact on local people's lives. The business diverts some of the higher-quality waste to good causes, including clothes and shoes to the Salvation Army and records, CDs and DVDs to the British Heart Foundation. It also donates a selection of old computers to a severely autistic local man called Matthew, who finds comfort in dismantling and rebuilding them.

"Young people with autism need learning experiences tailored to their

Outstanding in the field: Andy Cattigan ensures Waste King's business is conducted responsibly

requirements," says Andy Cattigan, Waste King's operations director. "If we can do something to help Matthew and others like him to get more out of life, we're delighted to do so." Being environmentally friendly is also a major focus. The firm's ethos is to reduce long-term pollution by sending the smallest amount of waste possible to landfill and it guarantees to recycle at least 85 per cent of what it collects. "If you're in the waste and recycling business, it's important to be seen not only as professional and competent, but also as caring for the environment," says Cattigan. "It's important that Waste King provides a 'green' and 'clean' service as well as a competitive one." Among its other community activities, Waste King has sponsored a football club and even rescued a giant African land snail which had been thrown away. Employees named it Colin and lent it to a local school for safekeeping.
